Jenyns' Roll of Arms as an Ordinary.

EDITED BY JAMES GREENSTREET, HON. SECRETARY OF THE PIPE ROLL SOCIETY.

THE 409 entries of the blazon of ancient English coat-armour which are here printed in the form of an Ordinary, constitute the second half of an early heraldic collection which has always been considered of very great importance. The first half of the collection was compiled as an Ordinary at the outset, the entries now printed being, no doubt, a series of miscellaneous additional coats that came under the compiler's notice too late to be included in his original scheme. The volume containing the entire collection—namely, the Ordinary and its accompanying Roll of miscellaneous Arms—fortunately attracted the attention of Robert Glover, Somerset Herald, perhaps the most assiduous heraldic student of the Elizabethan age. Glover at once recognised the value of the information afforded by the record, and made an elaborate copy of it for use in the College of Arms, which is now lost. In addition to this, he got the original into his own possession, and associated with it the name of one Mr. Thomas Jenyns, gent., to whom the book had formerly belonged. Since then the collection has invariably been designated "Mr. Thomas Jenyns' Booke of Armes," though in their zeal for appropriating the contents as the handiwork of their own fraternity, the heralds went so far as to assert that it was compiled by one William Jennings, stated to have been Chester Herald in the reign of Henry VII.

Hitherto our principal authority for the text of this collection has been a version in Norman-French blazon in the British Museum (Cottonian MSS., Tiberius E., ix.), the writing of which is of the time of Elizabeth, and supposed to be that of Mr. James Strangman, an industrious antiquary of the period. This was probably taken from Glover's transcript. Within the last few years, however, I have discovered at the College of Arms a copy of the original, which was undoubtedly made long before Glover's. This is shown by the title, in which it purports to be a transcript from a book, painted in colours, the property of the Pursuivant of Richard, Duke of Gloucester (afterwards King Richard III.), and possessed by the said Pursuivant, it says, in the 20th year of King Edward IV. There is not a word, it will be observed, about Mr. Thomas Jenyns, into whose hands the volume must have passed subsequently.

The text of the Ordinary has never yet been printed entire, but I have prepared for the press a re-arrangement of it—the blazon being rendered into English—and this will shortly appear. The text of the Roll of miscellaneous Arms was printed for the first time in the "Antiquary," now four years ago, but the opinion has been often expressed that an English translation ought to have been appended. The present re-publication of this valuable record is principally intended to supply that want. At the same time, the conversion of the contents of the Roll into an Ordinary will, no doubt, very materially assist the student when comparing the contents of the second half of "Jenyns' Booke" with those of the first.

Descriptions of all the other versions then known to me were printed in the "Reference List of Rolls of Arms" (London: 1881. Geo. Bell & Sons, York Street, Covent Garden. Reprinted from the "Genealogist.") A somewhat fuller account of certain of these versions had already been given by me, in 1880, in the pages of the "Antiquary," when I first printed "Jenyns' Roll." The numbers placed at the end of each entry in the Ordinary correspond with those attached to the entries of the original text, as printed consecutively therein.
